Latest in long line of Attack series radios comes the Attack-R 40 MHz.

Next time you are at your local club or a regional or national event take a look at what type of radio equipment is being used, you will definitely see some very exotic equipment on show as well as the affordable day to day radios we mere mortals use. There is however one thing that a lot of the equipment will have in common and that is the name Futaba. Without doubt Futaba radio is the most widely used equipment in competition today and now you can have your favourite in 40 MHz too.

Recently released from Futaba is the Attack-R outfit. This comprises of an FP-R103F receiver which must rank as the smallest 40 MHz receiver yet produced at around half the size of each one of the FP-S 148 servos also supplied. The Attack-R transmitter comes with all the functions you would expect to find in an Attack series transmitter, Trim selectors, servo reverse, charging socket, adjustable throttle position, easy access to the frequency crystal, a power indicator and easy to use carrying handle all contained on or in the by now familiar easy grip Attack case. So for all of you drivers who thought that you could never afford one of those fancy new forty meg sets here it is, come and get it.

Available from Futaba agents everywhere, price around £69.95.
